Working in groups makes it possible for teaching to be more interactive and participatory, and it gives everybody more time to ask questions. It also allows quieter participants to have more of a chance to contribute. The exercises are designed for groups of three to four people with a trainer. In this integrated course where there are fewer practical sessions for each skill as compared to previous trainings, it is essential that the maximum number of participants per group is four. If there are enough trainers to have groups of three people with each trainer, then this is even better, as it gives all participants more opportunity to practice their counseling and practical skills.
